

Average daily pay is defined as “the employee’s gross earnings for the 52 weeks before the end of the pay period immediately before the calculation is made, divided by the number of whole or part days during which the employee earned those earnings, including any day on which the employee was on paid leave, but excluding any day on which the employee did not actually work”.